HOW DO YOU RELATE TO YOUR BODY?

You may have a body that processes sensation in extremes—either extremely sensitive or requiring extreme experiences in order to register sensation at all.

Your body is a means for metamorphosis and control; modifying it through tattooing, piercing or even bodybuilding may appeal to you.

You are capable of tremendous sexual response; you may crave strong sensations like sexual arousal, where subtler sensations, like nonsexual touch, may leave you feeling unfulfilled.

HOW DO YOU TAKE PHYSICAL CARE OF YOURSELF AND OTHERS?

You can be attentive to the point of consuming as a caretaker, or demanding when you're a patient. You are cool-headed and focused in an emergency.

Your boundaries with others may at times be too loose for their comfort. For example, you may have no problem with showering with the bathroom door and curtain open, but not everyone in your household may be as comfortable with it.

You are unafraid to deal with the baser aspects of having a body, such as disease and waste elimination. They don't scare you.

Your core physical need is: To feel in control of your physical self.

HOW DO YOU NEED TO EAT AND NOURISH YOURSELF?

You can have an enormous appetite one day and then on another day lose all interest in food.

You may struggle with bingeing or becoming intensely drawn to eat large amounts of a given food – then cutting it completely out of your diet.

You may use food and eating as a way to feel safe in your body – such as controlling how much you eat, or insulating yourself with extra weight as a self-protective measure.

HOW DO YOU HANDLE MONEY?

Sharing money feels intimate to you and you may stay in financially dependent relationships until they become dysfunctional.

Your parents may have been secretive, manipulative or controlling about money, which left scars.

During your lifetime, money can come and go in large waves, varying between extreme wealth and a wipeout.

Money is emotional for you; learn to invest sensibly.

YOUR HAVINGNESS BUCKET:

Oddly, your bucket may seem small, yet it's never full and sometimes your craving for wealth is extreme. Learning to share without controlling or being controlled is the solution.
